6-2-22 through 7-14 (Online) and July 22-23-22 (In-Person), Ecologies of Justice - Sustainability in Prison Gathering, Evergreen College, Olympia, Washington

Description = The ECOLOGIES OF JUSTICE conference will convene researchers, practitioners, and community leaders who work at the intersection of correctional programs, community-based interventions, and ecological sustainability. Join us to learn together and build new collaborations. The event takes place in two parts. PART ONE will be fully online and focuses primarily on sharing information and engaging in discussion. Weekly sessions on Thursdays (from June 2 until July 14) will center on themes such as social impacts of ecological conservation, key issues related to reentry, green workforce development, STEM education and college programs, the healing potentials of people-plant interactions, food and agriculture, developing participatory and collaborative research projects, and program evaluation. PART TWO (July 22-23) will take place in person, and focuses on building a community of researchers and practitioners who are thinking about and acting on ecological issues in prison, jail, and community spaces. Participation is extremely limited for Part Two and is by invitation only. Anyone who is interested in attending Part Two may express their interest through a short application. It is intended for those who are actively imagining, designing, researching, or implementing programs, research projects, or interventions. The focus of this part of the conference will be to identify key issues for advancing the work in our local, regional, or national contexts and develop new collaborations, research agendas, future visions, next steps, scenarios, and/or courses of action.

Cost = Free.
